In particular: Ensure that the external units are fixed with at least the recommended release of 100 mm.ensure the units are stable. There are several configuration options for heat pumps. For efficiency, locate the external and internal units as well as virtually possible. The external unit gap for any obstruction needs to be at least 500 mm in the air intake and exit faces, and 100 mm on any other face. Consider primary use of the heat pump when locating the external unit. Inner unit The internal unit heats / cools, dried and circulates the air of the room and usually contained a coil, fan, air filter, air reeds and condensate tube. With heat pumps used frequently, this should be done several times a year. Finally, the Branz investigations of heat pumps installed have found that some common mistakes are avoided. Effective airflow is important: If mounted very close to the ceiling, a unit can short cycle and shut down prematurely. If the unit is located in a corner, the room can only be partially heated or cooled. If the site is subject to drafts, the performance of the unit can be affected. CAREFUL THOUGHT MUST be given to the localization of the internal unity. They reach the temperature defined faster than fixed speed systems, and speed control provides a quieter operation. In this page: Unitindoor Configuration Options UnitIndoorConfigurationOps Air-air heat pump design options include: Split - Outdoor unit provides a separate internal unit located in the space being heated or COOLEDMULTI-SPLIT - An outdoor unit provides a number of internal units - an internal unit located in an empty space of (as above the ceiling) has many supply ducts to a number of rooms, controlled separately by airflow rate. Heating pumps can operate as: an inverter system air" where a variable speed variable speed compressor motor a constant temperature setting with a small floating fixed speed system - where a single speed compressor on the external unit operates at a constant speed and is on or off. Inverter systems are most commonly installed because they are approximately 30% more efficient than fixed speed systems. Ensure that the operating lengths recommended by the tube manufacturer are not exceeded.
